JANE O'GORMAN SOLVES YOUR PROBLEMS TODAY AND EVERY DAY

HOME A-MOAN They hate him

I DON'T know how much more of my girlfriend I can stand. She's never happy and moans all the time.

When we first met, she was desperate for us to move in together straight away – so we did.

Then she demanded a dog, which cost me £500.

After a few months of renting she decided that she wanted a new home.

We moved into our state-of-the-art pad in February 2002 and she was happy for a while.

But now she's saying that nothing will be complete until she has a child and gives up work. Even though we're only in our mid-20s and have a great life, she never stops whinging. My friends and family ask how I can bear to put up with it, and I'm now beginning to wonder.

Many women hope to become mothers one day – so I don't think that your girlfriend is unusual in that respect.

JANE SAYS: Most of us are ambitious and aim to get the very best out of life.

But if you honestly believe that she's overly ungrateful and a bit of a drag, then perhaps she is really not the right person for you.

If other people have already noticed that she is always discontented, then I suggest that you talk to your girlfriend and say that you find her moaning extremely immature and totally unnecessary.

Perhaps she may like to give a second thought to those kids in Africa or people with cancer this Christmas instead.

Ultimately, if you don't feel that you could bear to start a family with her, then you need to move on now.

MY parents hate my new boyfriend.

Just because he used to go joy-riding and did a bit of hash, they've already decided that he's no good.

I'm 16 and I keep trying to tell them that he's changed and that he doesn't do that kind of stuff anymore.

But they won't listen and won't allow him to come to our big party on Boxing Day.

He's misunderstood and I strongly believe that everyone deserves a second chance.

JANE SAYS: I don't know your boyfriend and I don't know you but I'm with your parents on this one.

There's no way that I'd want my darling daughter risking her life with an ex-drug taking, joy-riding, graffiti nerd.

Perhaps your fella has changed for the better – bully for him – but let him change with somebody else.

I suspect that you're worth 50 of him.

Don't dig your heels in and feel tempted to rebel for this idiot, because he's just not worth it.

Former lover is being disloyal

MY ex-girlfriend has started going out with one of my mates and he never misses a chance to brag about how good she is in bed.

If he is to be believed, she has him swinging from the light fittings every night. They enjoy bondage games, dressing up and loads of sexual positions.

Apparently she is now feeling sexually fulfilled for the "first time in her life" and the multiple orgasms are amazing.

I just find this so hurtful, because she has obviously been talking about my performance in bed. I would never dream of being so disloyal and indiscreet.

I can't believe that she is being so spiteful, especially as she was totally frigid when we first met and I painstakingly taught her to relax during sex and to love her body.

I'm due to see her again soon at a party and feel very tempted to tell everyone what a little bitch she is.

JANE SAYS: Turn the other cheek and just don't get involved.

This talk of your mate's is immature and pathetic – and I doubt if it's even true. Anyone who brags about their sex life is to be pitied.

Your ex-girlfriend knows the truth about you, so just rise above it and make sure you get on with your life.

When you see her, be charming and adult. Let her remember what she's missing.

My drunken sex hell at works do

A GUY persuaded me to have sex with him at the office party.

He got nasty and gripped my wrists until I agreed.

As he thrust away, he said: "You're really gagging for this." But I wasn't. I hated the whole experience.

The second he was finished, I pulled my knickers back up and rushed to the loo where I was violently sick.

A colleague rescued me and said she'd help me find my bag. As we walked back into the main office, he was smirking with the other guys from his section. I'm convinced he was bragging about what he'd done. As I tried to find my coat, I heard them whispering about me. I'm sure I heard one mutter the word "slag".

Cheek

The next day, I went and got the morning-after pill from the chemist and I cried all weekend.

On the Monday at work, this creep greeted me like a long-lost friend. He even had the nerve to suggest we "do it again some time". Somehow I managed to tell him to "f--- off" and he had the bloody cheek to look insulted.

Now I sort of feel that I might have been raped but I'm not sure. The problem is that I did have a lot to drink that night and was out of control. But I didn't want to have sex with him but he kind of forced me.

I'm so confused and angry with myself, I don't know what I think.

JANE SAYS: Please find the strength to contact Rape Crisis at www.rapecrisis.co.uk, where you will find details of a local centre.

It's vital you get help and speak to an expert who can support you.

I understand that you feel rotten but you mustn't feel that this horrible incident was your fault.

If your revolting colleague forced you into having sex with him, then it doesn't matter how much you had to drink.

You mustn't carry this burden on your own. Think about confiding in your parents or a friend and get the back-up you need in bringing this monster to justice.

Call The Samaritans (0845 790 9090) if you feel you are getting desperate.

Scared of his size

I'M putting off having sex with my new boyfriend because I'm worried about the size of his penis.

He always wears tight jeans and the outline looks enormous. One of my friends says that she once saw him in swimming trunks and he was huge.

I've only had sex with one guy before – that was with my ex-boyfriend of four years. His witsit was about four inches and comfortable.

I know that my current boyfriend is keen to sleep with me but what if I can't accommodate him and it hurts?

JANE SAYS: I suspect that you're not quite ready for sex with this guy yet. You need to get to know him an awful lot more and start to feel more relaxed and confident in his company.

Give yourself all the time you need to build up a better rapport and ask him to be patient.

When you feel ready, relax and insist on lots of foreplay. Protect yourself against pregnancy and catching a sexually transmitted infection (STI) by using condoms and make sure that you include lots of lubrication.

If you feel relaxed and confident, then your vagina will be able to accommodate him. You might need to experiment with positions to work out which feels right for you but you'll get there in the end.

IT'S one of this year's most successful charity campaigns, raising more than a million.

And it's all thanks to a load of old rubbish!

When Cancer Research kicked off their GiveGet campaign this autumn by asking supporters to donate bin bags full of unwanted clothes they were backed by lots of high-profile stars.

Sexy celebs including model Lisa Butcher, teen diva Charlotte Church, supermodel Jerry Hall and R'n'B singer Jamelia donated some of their trendiest clobber.

And yesterday everyone involved was celebrating their massive total of £1.29million.

A delighted Cancer Research spokesman said: "It's been a great success. We'd like to thank all the celebrities - their support really made a difference."

Bikini

People donated unwanted clothes at branches of high street favourite TK Maxx and Cancer Research stores across the UK.

Model Nell McAndrew, 29, who gave some of her favourite designer shoes, also peeled off for a charity book by award-winning snapper Jason Bell.

And blonde Lisa wore a black bin liner bikini emblazoned with GiveGet in shocking pink for her pic. She says: "I was more than happy to give stuff away - there is only so much a girl can wear!"

Charlotte, 18, was snapped taking out two bags of clothes in bin bags. While model-turned-singer Leah Wood, 25, daughter of Stones rocker Ronnie, was pictured singing on stage while pairs of boxer shorts were chucked at her.

Even roly-poly funnyman Johnny Vegas, 53, got in on the act - driving a Mini crammed with clobber.

The campaign is closed but you can still see more great celeb pics and support the charity by picking up a copy of GiveGet by Jason Bell supported by TK Maxx. Log on to www.cancerresearchuk.org.

All products subject to availability. All prices exclude P&P.

MIKE WARD WHAT'S HOT TO WATCH

AS you may have spotted if you sat through the closing credits, last night's ITV1 drama Can't Buy Me Love, about a guy whose world came crashing down after he pretended he'd won the lottery, was merely 'inspired' by real events. None of its characters, the programme-makers were legally obliged to stress, was based on an actual person, living, dead or in limbo. For some genuine tales of jackpot-fuelled misery, however, you simply have to tune in tonight at the same time (ITV1, 9pm) for the documentary A Decade Of Lottery Disasters. It looks at feuds, bust-ups, breakdowns, examples of how the cash can go to people's heads, plus the story of a couple who lost their £3million winning ticket, and who, amazingly enough, aren't together anymore. There's also the story of a guy who faked an £8 million win and ended up behind bars. Meanwhile, in Holby City (BBC1, 8pm), Jess thinks Sean may have given her a sexually transmitted disease. The good news is, it's a false alarm. The bad news is that he's given her something way more significant instead.

...on last night's telly

I WAS quite prepared for CAN'T BUY ME LOVE (ITV) to be a dud - particularly because it starred Martin Kemp, who has hardly set the small screen alight since he left EastEnders.

Well, I was wrong. It wasn't that good. But it wasn't that bad, either. Kemp played painter and decorator Alan Harris, a roguish but good-natured chancer, whose easy-going approach to life had saddled himself and his wife Donna (Michelle Collins) with a crushing burden of debt.

Their marriage was cracking, not helped by Alan's affair with a bit of posh totty - wine bar owner Gilly (Joe-Anne Knowles).

One day, he blurted out he'd won the Lottery. From then on, he piled lies on lies, fooling his wife and mistress, the local paper, his bank manager and various grasping relatives who emerged from the woodwork into believing £9m was on its way into his account.

Flash

Before the police rumbled him, it was spend, spend, spend.

Without Donna twiggling, he went into business with Gilly, borrowed her flash car and "gave" it to Donna, and through some sleight of hand that involved switching cheques between different accounts (which I still haven't worked out), he was able to buy a big house in the country and keep everyone sweet for a while. I thought it was all utterly preposterous.

Why didn't the genuine jackpot winner come forwards? One phone call to the National Lottery would surely have blown his tissue of lies apart.

But unbelievable as it seemed, the plot was based on the true story of Doncaster painter and decorator Howard Walmesley, who embarked on pretty much the same deception as Alan - right down to juggling wife and mistress and buying a mansion out in the country.

EastEnders stalwart Tony Jordan's script positively clunked with clichés, but Kemp and Collins turned in thoroughly engaging performances.

THE BBC is behaving outrageously (Daily Star, December 8).

Bosses are laying off staff while continuing to fleece us with their outdated licence fee.

It's time every TV viewer stood up to this. I could easily live without the Beeb - as could most of the British public.

J. BARKER
Weetwood, Leeds.

WHO on Earth voted Johnny Vegas the funniest man in Britain (Daily Star, December 10)?

Were they all supping Guinness - his favourite alcoholic drink?

If a proper nationwide poll was held for the country's favourite comedian, then surely Ken Dodd would win.

S. COCORAN
Leeds.

I DON'T think Lord Falconer wouldn't be so keen to oppose the self-defence bill for householders if he'd been burgled himself (Daily Star, December 7).

He should go along with the views of the country's top policeman Sir John Stevens.

S. VALENTINE
Blackburn, Lanes.

I'VE been on good behaviour for more than 80 years. Does that qualify me for the bundle of goodies extended to guests at one of Her Majesty's prisons (Daily Star, December 12)?

E. ROBINS
Darlington, Co. Durham.

It's the business

The difference between the guy in the big house and the average guy is that the big house guy is a loser who tried - Charles Bukowski

Movers & groovers

STELIOS Haji-Ioannou, easyJet founder and now chairman of the easyGroup empire that stretches from hire cars to cinemas, says there is a clear difference between entrepreneurs like him and corporate high-flyers.

Entrepreneurs had a spirit and a vision and know that at the end of their venture they could make a lot of money or end up poorer, he told business website Cantos. On the other hand, chief executives had a duty to their shareholders to be risk-averse and put little of their own cash at stake.

FIRMS are more optimistic about recruiting staff in the New Year than at any time since 1998, a report showed yesterday.

The poll, by employment group Manpower, showed a positive outlook for jobs in the next few months, especially in finance and business services.

CAPITA, the company that runs London's Congestion Charge system, yesterday named former Yahoo! boss Martina King as a non-executive director.

King was the UK chief of the internet firm who steered it through the dotcom boom and the more difficult years after the bubble burst.

She was promoted to a broader European role last year, but stepped down over summer.

King added the Capita post to her other part-time jobs on the boards of Johnston Press and the Prince's Trust.

THEME park attendance rose 2.2% at the top 50 theme parks around the world, according to the industry's bible Amusement Business.

Walt Disney parks in Florida, California and Tokyo topped the list. Some 252.4 million visitors went to the 50 biggest parks, the publication estimated. In 2003, attendance had dropped 1.5%.

Disney's Magic Kingdom in Florida had 15.2m visitors, Disneyland in southern California had 13.4m and Tokyo Disneyland had 13.2m.

AGENCY nurse company Nestor Healthcare has confirmed that Stephen Booty is to be chief executive after standing in as acting boss for the past six months.

HOT GOSSIP

KEEP an eye on Aim-listed travel promotions firm MMK Group, steady at 38 3/4p, which came to market in June. Half-year results due today are expected to show an 80% rise in turnover compared with the same period last year, with a similar boost in profits.

Germans eye the Exchange

THE London Stock Exchange has rejected a £1.3billion takeover proposal from continental rival Deutsche Boerse, it was announced yesterday.

But chief executive Clara Furze opened the door to further talks with Frankfurt to discuss the 530p a share all cash offer. It was seen by many analysts as a knock-out offer, and shares rose 110p to 540p.

The LSE said it had rejected the offer because it "undervalues the company" and the savings that could be made through a merger. "Nevertheless LSE's agreed to hold discussions with Deutsche Boerse to ascertain whether a significantly improved proposal can be agreed," it added.

WHO'S DEALING

SOFTWARE group Bits Corp held firm at 7p yesterday despite non-executive director Julian Levy selling down his stake. He netted around £10,560 from the sale of 160,000 shares at 6.6p to leave him with a holding of 408,000 shares or 0.92%.

Courts disaster

50,000 LOSE FURNITURE

FURNITURE chain Courts is to shut down in the UK for good in February leaving at least 2,200 staff without a job - and 50,000 customers without their furniture.

The administrators of the collapsed 154-year-old chain, KPMG, admitted yesterday that they have not been able to find a buyer for the whole business.

Instead, SB Capital Europe - US owner of Furnitureland - is taking on just 14 of the 88 stores for an undisclosed sum. It will convert these to the Furnitureland brand, possibly safeguarding the jobs of the 300 full and part-time staff.

Courts 200 head office staff were fired yesterday.

Attacks SB Capital, which also owns 50% of Land of Leather, will re-open all 88 stores on December 16 to sell off stock - then close the 74 of them it doesn't want by February 20.

The stores have been kept closed by KPMG following a series of attacks on staff by angry customers who have not been told whether they will get their furniture. KPMG administrator Mick McLoughlin said: "Unfortunately we did not receive any deliverable offers for the business as going concern."

"The offer with SB hopefully secures employment for the staff in the 14 stores and will help ensure customer orders are fulfilled."

WEIGHTING GAME: LA Fitness's chief executive, Fred Turok is ready for battle

LA FIT FOR BIDS

LA FITNESS is shaping up to be taken private in a deal worth up to £160million, triggering a windfall for founder Fred Turok. The UK's last remaining quoted fitness club operator said it had received a number of approaches from potential investors.

But it added there was no guarantee this would lead to an offer.

Turok, who started the business in 1990 and has a 14% stake, is thought to have grown increasingly disillusioned with using LA's listing as a means to drive expansion through acquisitions.

As well as its own executives, interest is likely to have come from private equity firms such as Bridgepoint, which owns the Virgin Active and Holmes Place chains, and Esporta operator Duke Street Capital.

LA recently issued a bullish update and said it had "great confidence" in prospects for the coming year. LA shares rose yesterday as analysts flagged up a bid battle.

Better off for better offer...

STEPHEN Howard, chief executive of industrial firm Novar, will collect £1.45million for his six weeks' work finding a buyer for the company.

Howard, the former Cookson boss brought in last month to see off a hostile cash and share bid by Melrose, yesterday agreed a far-higher £900m bid from US engineering giant Honeywell.

Bonus Howard will collect an £800,000 bonus on top of his annual £550,000 salary for selling the company at a premium.

Novar, formerly Caradon and before that Metal Box, has struggled to grow its three diverse businesses - fire alarms and thermometers in the US, cheque book printing and aluminium components in the UK.

Honeywell's offer includes a 6.6p a share dividend.

Picture perfect

BUDDING David Baileys have enthusiastically switched to digital photography, but they still want prints of the pictures of their precious moments, bringing a boost for Photo-Me International.

The company, best known for its photo booths, supplies minilabs to supermarkets and camera stores and has 2,000 kiosks where consumers can print off their snaps.

Chief executive Serge Crasnianski yesterday reported a near £3 million rise in half year profits to £18 million. Shares rose 4p to 97p.
